FALSE CLAIMS ACT INFORMATION

1.0 PURPOSE
The federal False Claims Act exists to fight fraud, or false claims, against the federal government involving any federally funded contract or program, with the exception of tax fraud. Pursuant to Section 6032 of the Federal Deficit Reduction Act of 2005, organizations that make or receive annual Medicaid payments of $5 million or more are required to provide to employees, agents and contractors detailed information about the False Claims Act and any state laws that pertain to civil or criminal penalties under such laws, including the role of such laws in preventing and detecting fraud, waste and abuse in federal health care programs.

2.0 SCOPE
This policy shall be available and apply to all employees, agents, and contractors of SJHS.

3.0 POLICY
Detailed information regarding the federal False Claims Act and applicable state false claims acts will be distributed to employees, contractors and agents through this policy and through the SJHS Corporate Responsibility Program handbook pursuant to the applicable provisions of the Deficit Reduction Act of 2005. Specific information provided consists of the following:

Definition of a “False Claim”
The Federal False Claims Act is a law that prohibits a person or entity from "knowingly" presenting or causing to be presented a false or fraudulent claim for payment or approval to the Federal government, and from "knowingly" making, using or causing to be made a false record or statement to get a false or fraudulent claim paid or approved by the Federal government. These prohibitions extend to claims submitted to Federal health care programs, such as Medicare or Medicaid. For purposes of the False Claims Act Laws, a “claim” includes, but is not limited to any request or demand for money or property that is submitted to the U.S. Government or to a contractor, grantee, or other recipient, if any portion of the request is to be funded or reimbursed by the government.

The term “knowingly” is defined to mean that a person, with respect to information:

- Has actual knowledge of false information in the claim,
- Deliberately ignores the truth or falseness of information on the claim, or
- Acts in reckless disregard of the truth or falseness of the information on the claim

The act does not require proof of a specific intent to defraud the U.S. government for the act.

Examples of fraud and abuse include:

- Billing for supplies or services not delivered or delivered in less than promised amounts.
- Misrepresenting or overcharging for products or services actually provided.
FALSE CLAIMS ACT INFORMATION

- Duplicate billing for services actually rendered.
- Falsely certifying that services were medically necessary or failure to perform a service.
- Falsely certifying that an individual meets the Medicare requirements for certain services.
- Seeking to increase reimbursement by improper billing procedures such as “upcoding” (changing a procedure code in order to obtain higher reimbursement for the procedure actually performed), or “unbundling” (dividing a procedure or service into two or more parts to obtain higher reimbursement).

Damages and Penalties

Under the federal False Claims Act (FCA), any entity or person who knowingly submits or causes a false claim to be submitted to the government may be liable for damages. As of August 1, 2016, False Claims Act civil penalties increase to between $10,781.40 and $21,562.80 per claim, plus three times the amount of damages that the federal government sustains because of the false claim.

Qui Tam “Whistle-blower” Provisions and Rights of Employees (Agents and Contractors)

A person who possesses and comes forward with information regarding false claims is authorized to file a case in federal court and sue, on behalf of the government, those entities that engaged in the fraud. These are called “qui tam” suits. The person coming forward is called a “relator/whistleblower”. Once the suit is filed by the relator/whistleblower, the Department of Justice then decides on behalf of the government whether to join the relator/whistleblower in prosecuting these cases. If the case is successful, the relator may share in the recovery amount. The amount of the relator’s share in the recovery depends on multiple factors.

In addition, the FCA provides a remedy for relators who are discharged, demoted, suspended, or discriminated against by his or her employer in retaliation for filing an FCA case. In order to receive the benefits of the protections of the FCA, the courts generally require the following of the employee:

- The employee must have been engaged in an activity protected by the FCA in furtherance of a qui tam suit;
- The employer must have known of the employee’s protected activity, and
- The employer must have retaliated or discriminated against the employee because of those actions.

If a court determines that a relator was terminated or otherwise retaliated against for filing a qui tam lawsuit, the employee is entitled to reinstatement at the same level, two times the back pay owed plus interest, litigation costs and reasonable attorneys’ fees and compensation for any “special damages” sustained as a result of the discrimination.

Applicable State Law

California, Texas and New Mexico have statutes similar to the federal FCA which are applicable to SJHS ministries and those associated with any SJHS ministry. For instance, California law provides that any entity or person who knowingly presents or causes to be presented a false claim for payment shall be liable for a civil monetary penalty of up to $10,000 for each false claim and the costs of any civil action brought to recover any penalties. Additional penalties of not less than two times and not more than three times the amount of damages may be awarded in certain situations. Criminal penalties can range from imprisonment for one year in the county jail or a fine not exceeding $1,000, or both such imprisonment and fine, to imprisonment in a state prison for one year or a fine not exceeding $10,000, or both such imprisonment and fine. In addition to similar federal whistleblower protections, the California FCA also permits punitive damages in appropriate circumstances.

In addition to similar federal protections, remedies for violations of the Texas equivalent of the FCA include restitution, fines of $1,000 to $10,000 for each unlawful act, and two times the value of the false claim. Depending upon the value of the payment made in violation of the Texas False Claims Act, criminal penalties can range from a misdemeanor to a felony in the first degree when amounts of $200,000 or more are involved. The Texas equivalent of the FCA does not appear to contain “whistleblower” protections such as those offered by the federal FCA and California equivalent, but there are certain public policy exceptions to termination at will employment recognized in case law which can add a measure of protection.

In addition to similar provisions similar in the federal FCA, the New Mexico equivalent of the FCA provides for penalties of triple the damages resulting from any false claims submitted, in addition to other civil penalties. New Mexico offers “whistleblower” protection similar to the federal FCA and California equivalent of the FCA, but unlike California, does not contain a provision for recovery of punitive damages. The New Mexico equivalent of the FCA does not contain specific criminal sanctions in addition to the civil penalties it provides, but does appear to contemplate the possibility of criminal charges based on other theories arising out of the false claim.
